PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

To the Honorable, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The undersigned, on behalf of the above-named petitioner, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia dismissing petition to review decision of The Tax Court of the United States for lack of jurisdiction, and order entered January 14, 1950, denying petition for rehearing.

OPINIONS BELOW

The findings of fact and opinion promulgated by The Tax Court of the United States herein are reported at pages 27 et seq. of the record. (8 T. C. No. 122). The order and decision made and entered by The Tax Court pursuant to its opinion are found at pages 58 to 60 of the record. The order of The Tax Court was entered March 23, 1948 and its decision on said order was entered April 6, 1948. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is found at R. Vol. III pages 957 et seq. of the record.

JURISDICTION

The findings of fact and opinion of The Tax Court of the United States were promulgated May 15, 1947 (R. Vol. 1, pp. 27 to 57). The order of The Tax Court was entered March 23, 1948 (R. Vol. 1, pp. 58-59). The decision of The Tax Court was entered April 6, 1948 (R. Vol. 1, p. 60). Petition to review decision of The Tax Court by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, pursuant to 26 USCA 1141 and 1142, was filed May 18, 1948 (R. Vol. 3, p. 946). The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under the provisions of Section 347(a), Title 28 USCA, and Sections 1141 and 1142, Title 26 USCA.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. The right of petitioner to full judicial review of all questions of law and facts involved in the case or controversy presented herein under the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States pursuant to 28 USCA 347(a) and 26 USCA 1141 and 1142.

2. The constitutionality of Section 403(e)(1) and

(2) of the Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943 with respect to its provisions being a denial of judicial review within the meaning of the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States.

3. The refusal of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia to review the errors of law claimed to have been committed by The Tax Court of the United States; and the adequacy of the judgment of the Court—with respect to full judicial review sought by the appeal—when limited to the constitutional question as decided.

4. The refusal of the Court to hold the Renegotiation Act unconstitutional under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution as applied to a contract directly with the Government for the erection of ordinary cantonments.

5. The Court erred in refusing to hold the Renegotiation Act unconstitutional under the Fifth Amendment as applied to contracts between a general contractor and the Government.

STATUTES INVOLVED

Section 347(a), Title 28, USCA, reads as follows:

"(a) In any case, civil or criminal, in a circuit court of appeals, or in the Courts of Appeals of the District of Columbia, it shall be competent for the Supreme Court of the United States, upon the petition of any party thereto, whether Government or other litigant, to require by certiorari, either before or after a judgment or decree by such lower court, that the cause be certified to the Supreme Court for determination by it with the same power and authority, and with like effect, as if the cause had been brought there by unrestricted writ of error or appeal."

Sections 1141(a) and (b) and 1142, Title 26 USCA, read as follows:

"(a) JURISDICTION. The circuit courts of appeals and the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review the decisions of The Tax Court, except as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code, in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of the dstrict courts in civil actions tried without a jury; and the judgment of any such court shall be final, except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, in the manner provided in Section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code.

(b) VENUE

(1) IN GENERAL. Except as provided in paragaraph 2, such decisions may be reviewed by the Circuit Court of Appeals for the circuit in which is located the collector's office to which was made the return of the tax in respect of which the liability arises or, if no return was made, then by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

(2) BY AGREEMENT. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1, such decisions may be reviewed by any circuit court of appeals, or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, which may be designated by the Commissioner and the taxpayer by stipulation in writing.

(3) APPLICATION OF SUBSECTION. This subsection shall be applicable to all decisions of the Tax Court rendered on and after May 10, 1934, and section 1002 of the Revenue Act of 1926, 44 Stat. 110, as in force prior to May 10, 1934, shall be applicable to such decisions rendered prior thereto, except that paragraph 2 of this subsection may be applied to any such decision rendered prior to May 10, 1932."

"SEC. 1142. PETITION FOR REVIEW

The decision of the Tax Court rendered after February 26, 1926 (except as provided in subdivision (j) of section 283 and in subdivision (h) of section 318 of the Revenue Act of 1926, 44 Stat. 65, 83, relating to hearings before the Tax Court prior to February 26, 1926) may be reviewed by a Circuit Court of Appeals, or the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, as provided in section 1141, if a petition for such review is filed by either the Commissioner or the taxpayer within three months after the decision is rendered, or, in the case of a decision rendered on or before June 6, 1932, within six months after the decision is rendered. 53 Stat. 165, amended Oct. 21, 1942, 4:30 p.m., E.W.T., c. 619, Title V, Sec. 504(a), (c), 56 Stat. 957."

Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943 (Internal Revenue Code) reads as follows:

"(e)(1) Any contractor or subcontractor aggrieved by an order of the Board determining the amount of excessive profits received or accrued by such contractor or subcontractor may, within ninety days (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the last day) after the mailing of the notice of such order under subsection (c)(1), file a petition with the Tax Court of the United States for a redetermination thereof. Upon such filing such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction, by order, to finally determine the amount, if any, of such excessive profits received or accrued by the contractor or subcontractor, and such determination shall not be reviewed or redetermined by any court or agency. The court may determine as the amount of excessive profits an amount either less than, equal to, or greater than that determined by the Board. A proceeding before the Tax Court to finally determine the amount, if any, of excessive profits shall not be treated as a proceeding to review the determination of the Board, but shall be treated as a proceeding de novo. For the purposes of this subsection the court shall have the same powers and duties, insofar as applicable, in respect of the contractor, the subcontractor, the Board and the Secretary, and in respect of the attendance of witnesses and the production of papers, notice of hearings, hearings before divisions, review by the Tax Court of decisions of divisions, stenographic reporting, and reports of proceedings, as such court has under sections 1110, 1111, 1113, 1114, 1115(a), 1116, 1117(a), 1118, 1120, and 1121 of the Internal Revenue Code in the case of a proceeding to redetermine a deficiency. In the case of any witness for the Board or Secretary, the fees and mileage, and the expenses of taking any deposition shall be paid out of appropriations of the Board or department available for that purpose, and in the case of any other witnesses, shall be paid, subject to rules prescribed by the court, by the party at whose instance the witness appears or the deposition is taken. The filing of a petition under this subsection shall not operate to stay the execution of the order of the Board under subsection (c)(2).

"(2) Any contractor or subcontractor (excluding a subcontractor described in subsection (a) (5) (B) aggrieved by a determination of the Secretary made prior to the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1943, with respect to a fiscal year ending before July 1, 1943, as to the existence of excessive profits, which is not embodied in an agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, may, within ninety days (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the last day) after the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1943, file a petition with the Tax Court of the United States for a redetermination thereof, and any such contractor or subcontractor aggrieved by a determination of the Secretary made on or after the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1943, with respect to any such fiscal year, as to the existence of excessive profits, which is not embodied in an agreement with the contractor or subcontractor, may, within ninety days (not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the last day) after the date of such determination, file a petition with The Tax Court of the United States for a redetermination thereof. Upon such filing such court shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties, and the proceeding shall be subject to the same provisions, as in the case of a petition filed with the court under paragraph (1), except that the amendments made to this section by the Revenue Act of 1943 which are not made applicable as of April 28, 1942, or to fiscal years ending before July 1, 1943, shall not apply." (Italics supplied)

STATEMENT

1. The petitioner is a Maryland corporation with principal place of business in Minneapolis, Minnesota.

2. The case involves two contracts for the construction of Cantonments in Camp McCoy, one in the amount of $6,838,412.21, and the other in the amount of $80,576.30. The government paid the petitioner in full for this work, together with some extras, less some deductions for changes.

3. The actual allowable and reasonable job costs on the said two jobs, exclusive of compensation paid or incurred to M. J. Ring, Martin Ring, M. A. Floyd and A. J. Wiik, and exclusive of Wisconsin income taxes and interest thereon, and exclusive of federal income taxes and interest thereon, and exclusive of any profit, was the sum of $4,936,172.52.

4. The larger of the two contracts was entered into and work was commenced before the Renegotiation Act was passed. The smaller contract was entered into in October, 1942.

5. Floyd had a profit-sharing contract with the petitioner substantially similar to earlier contracts with him in force since June, 1939, and Wiik had a profit-sharing contract with the petitioner in existence since June 16, 1939, and had been working under similar contracts with petitioner since 1934.

6. By the term of the contracts with Floyd and Wiik they were each to receive 10% of the profits earned by the petitioner on jobs estimated and superintended by them.

7. The amount of compensation to which Floyd and Wiik were entitled under their contracts, without giving effect to renegotiation of the petitioner, was $110,275.32 for Floyd and $102,388.91 for Wiik. Both of said contracts of employment were approved by the Salary Stabilization Unit of the Treasury Department of the United States on March 9, 1943. The compensation earned by Wiik and Floyd for the years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, based upon the profit-sharing contracts, was as follows:

	A. I. WIIK	M. A. FLOYD
1936	$2,400.00
1937	3,000.00
1938	13,891.75
1939	2,400.00	$18,238.55
1940	3,400.00
1941	16,400.00	29,322.28

8. The contract sales and job profit of Ring Construction Corporation for the years 1938 to 1941, inclusive, are as follows:

Year Ended	Contract Sales	Job Profit
1938	$1,286,000	$111,000
1939	239,000	13,000
1940	1,336,000	153,000
1941	1,804,000	269,000
TOTAL	$4,665,000	$546,000

9. The job costs above referred to did not include the petitioner's expenses for carrying out the renegotiation proceedings.

10. All of the foregoing facts were stipulated.

11. The principal contract was dated March 26, 1942, and the material facts concerning that contract are as follows:

The contract included provisions for unit prices for certain typical items to control if additional items of that kind were ordered or if any of them were eliminated. Certain buildings were to be completed within 105 days, and the remaining units within 180 days, and the whole job was to be completed within 180 days. This was calendar days, not working days. There was a provision for liquidated damages for delay with respect to the first group of items at the rate of $15.00 per structure per calendar day of delay "until the work is completed and accepted." It was further provided "no building shall be considered complete until all water, gas, electricity and storm sanitary lines are completed according to the specifications and functioning in such a way as to perform services contemplated by the contract". (See Contracts Special Conditions-6) Bidders were required to visit the site and familiarize themselves with conditions, and failure to visit the site would not be held sufficient grounds for additional compensation (Cont. Spec. Cond.-7). The work was to be planned and carried out as directed by the government and in accordance with progress charts specified (Cont. Spec. Cond. 28). The contractor was required to submit for approval, in writing, a list of all sub-contractors, and no work could be sublet without the approval of the government (Cont. Spec. Cond. 18). The general contractor was to guarantee all material, equipment and workmanship against defects for a period of one year from the date of acceptance (Cont. Spec. Cond. 19). All wages to be paid were specified (Cont. Spec. Cond. 25). The contractor was required to furnish sufficient labor and equipment and work such hours, including nights, Sundays and holidays, as might be necessary to comply with the progress schedule (Cont. Spec. Cond. 28). The contractor was to assume full responsibility for the work against all hazards (Cont. Spec. Cond. 36). The contractor was required to furnish safeguards and safety devices reasonably necessary to protect the life and health of its employees (Cont. Spec. Cond. 37). The contractor was to pay all federal, state and local taxes imposed prior to the date of the contract (Spec. Cond. 63). The contractor was required to give a performance bond and a payment bond for the protection of labor and material supplied. The government was to authorize the contractor to dismiss any employee deemed incompetent or careless

(Gen. Cond. 12). The governent was made the interpreter of the intent and meaning of the drawings and specifications (Gen. Cond. 15). In case of discrepancies the government was to determine which provisions to follow (Gen. Cond. 27). The size of the undertaking can be understood by seeing the list of drawings set forth in Spec. Cond. 40. There was nothing in the contract to protect the contractor against loss resulting from unforseen circumstances or an erroneous estimate of cost (Spec. Cond. 63). The government reserved the right, under certain conditions, to take over the work, including the materials and equipment on the site, to finish the job at the expense of the contractor (see Contract Article 9). The government was the final judge in all disputes (see Contract Article 9) (Article 15). The government reserved the right to terminate the contract at any time in its sole discretion (cont. Art. 28). The government reserved the right to require the contractor to pay overtime rates of pay for overtime work (see Article 30). The construction work here involved was limited to Areas (E) and (C), although the specifications referred to Areas (A) and (G), inclusive. The petitioner was actually required to pay penalties for delay in the amount of approximately $14,000 (J. A. 127). Each day of delay would have resulted in a penalty of $7,500.00 (J. A. 127).

12. Morris Ring was the president and general manager of petitioner, and he and his family own all of the stock of the corporation. He had lived in Minneapolis about 32 years (J. A. 92). At the time the contract was entered into the petitioner had a net worth of $750,000.00 (J. A. 95). The request for bids came to the petitioner's attention about February 28, 1942 (J. A. 95). The plans were received about March 10, 1942 (J. A. 96). The bids were opened March 16, 1942 (J. A. 97). Camp McCoy is in a smalltown area and all of the labor had to be imported from other places (J. A. 97). Mechanics who were not trained were required to be used (J. A. 100). The nearest city to Camp McCoy was Chicago (J. A. 100). The difficulties of obtaining labor at Sparta where Camp McCoy was located, were increased by war conditions (J. A. 100). Labor was not as productive as formerly. There was difficulty in obtaining building materials (J. A. 101). The job required approximately 20,000,000 board feet of lumber (J. A. 101). The bid was submitted by Morris Ring on behalf of petitioner after collaboration and consultation with others in the company (J. A. 102, 103). The figures placed on the estimate sheets represented his best judgment as to the cost of performing the work besides an allowance for overhead and profit (J. A. 103). The rate of profit estimated and included in the bid was the same as generally calculated on similar work in the past (J. A. 103).

It was the regular practice of the governmental agencies in determining whether or not to let a contract after bids had been received, to make a comparison between the bids and their own estimate (J. A. 105-108).

If the bid did not run substantially over the estimate they let the job (J. A. 108-109).

Major Humphrey, who had charge of the letting of the job, stated to Mr. Ring: "Although your bid is about five per cent higher than we estimated the job cost of it, we will recommend it for acceptance" (J. A. 109).

Three or four hours later, they announced the awarding of the contract to the Ring Construction Corporation (J. A. 109).

13. There are great hazards involved in the performance of this contract because of the penalty for the delay, and there could have been a loss of one-half million dollars to a million dollars, instead of a profit. (J. A. 127).

14. Neither Floyd nor Wiik were ever stockholders of the Ring Construction Corporation, and, aside from their profit-sharing arrangement for employment, they had no other relationship whatsoever with the company; nor are either of them members of the Ring family, nor related by marriage or blood.

15. Madsen, Schumacher, Watson & Associates were successful bidders on other areas at Camp McCoy two days before the letting of the Ring contract (J. A. 139-140). The bid was read publicly by Colonel Humphrey (J. A. 140).

He announced the unit prices for the typical buildings, included in the bid, of which Ring made a memorandum. He gave the memorandum to Wiik, who made a record of it (J. A. 140).

Eight or ten days after the work was started by Ring, he had a talk with Colonel Humphrey on the 'phone, who said, "Area D was advertised for jobs and the bidder, the low bidder is not going to accept (get) the job" (J. A. 141) because his bid was way above the government's estimate (J. A. 141) and before re-advertising, Colonel Humphrey was trying to learn if anybody else would take over Area D. Ring didn't think it was advisable to take on any more at Camp McCoy and he told them why (J. A. 141). Humphrey said, "If you would want to negotiate we will offer you a five per cent above your unit price that you have in your contract already (J. A. 142). Ring did not accept the proposal (J. A. 142).

16. Variations in the cost of labor for the handling of lumber per thousand feet might be as much as fifteen dollars a thousand under differing conditions. The estimate on labor involved a hazardous speculation "definitely." The manner in which the job was handled reduced the estimated cost of overtime. The job was organized near one hundred per cent efficiency. The weather conditions as forecast in the estimate of the job were based upon normal rainfall. There was very little rainfall; this worked out to considerable advantage of Ring. They worked almost every day (J. A. 197-201).

17. Mr. Wiik referred to the memorandum given to him by Ring respecting the unit prices of other contractors at Camp McCoy, and gave two or three typical items. The unit price on barracks in the Ring bid and contract was $14,450.00, of which there were one hundred ninety-two, constituting about half the job (J. A. 200). The unit price on this item in the Madsen Company contract was $14,475.00, a difference of twenty-five dollars per building. The unit price on type A concrete, including forms, in the Ring bid was twenty-five dollars per cubic yard. The Madsen price was twenty-nine dollars per cubic yard; type E concrete—Ring twenty-six dollars, Madsen thirty dollars (J. A. 200-201).

18. Two stipulations were made at T. p. 293, as follows:

Petitioner at all steps protested being required to participate in renegotiation proceedings—the unilateral determination was dated December 20, 1943, a correct copy of which is attached to the petition in this case—the copy of the communication from the Internal Revenue Agent attached to the petition and, dated February 11, 1944, having to do with the matter of taxes, is a correct copy of the original communication.

19. In certain periods the mortality rate of contractors has been very high. The largest and so-called best construction firms in the country have met with disastrous financial reverses. This is true because it is the nature of the business to sell the market short. The average range of bids on public works is 25% between the low and the high bid, and this occurs frequently. As between the low bid and the next low bid, the range is between 5% and 10%. This has been true for many years. In 1942 the conditions were fairly stable, and the discrepancy between bids was not so great. At that time it was probably 5% between the low and the second man, and 15% between the low and the high man. This was shown by a qualified expert, and not contradicted. He gave it as his opinion that in 1942 there definitely was actual competition in the field of work with which we are here concerned. There was no contradiction to the testimony of another expert, George Heller, that the contracting business was very much of a speculative and risky business (J. A. 270-272).

20. For the purpose of sustaining the claimed constitutionality of the act, applied retroactively to the principal contract of the petitioner, the case was adjourned to Washington where the court took testimony on the "background of the constitutional problems." Although the court held that the burden of proof was on the petitioner to show that it had not received excessive profits (J. A. 63-74), the respondent assumed the burden of going forward with respect to the "background of the constitutional problems." Outside of opinions of government witnesses as to the need for a Renegotiation Act to prevent profiteering generally, the testimony was directed primarily to the issue of whether or not competition had broken down in the field of the erection of cantonments. The testimony shows clearly and unequivocally that the government was in a position to deal at arm's length with the petitioner in connection with the Camp McCoy work; that there was no overreaching, and that the price arrived at was an eminently fair one. There is no dispute but what the government, with full knowledge of the passage of the Renegotiation Act, which occurred subsequent to the making of the principal contract with the petitioner, carried out its contract and paid the consideration therefor in full before asserting any right to renegotiate. It is undisputed that the government had the absolute right to terminate the contract at any time. Promptly upon the passage of the act the government was in a position where it could hold the petitioner to the contract by a failure to terminate it and then take the inequitable position that, although intending to keep the petitioner bound to this principal contract, it would be free to repudiate the contract price. This is exacly what it did. There was much loose testimony and intensive cross examination of government witnesses concerning the question of whether or not there was competition at the time the work was let to Ring. There was no proof whatsoever of lack of competiton in this field, whatever may be said of other fields of war activities, nor was there anything to indicate that the government could not, and did not, deal at arm's length with the petitioner. Moreover, the government's own witness, Lt. Col. O. P. Easterwood, of the office of Chief of Engineers in Washington, clearly testified to support the Petitioner's position. His testimony is found in J. A. pages 816-819. In his uncontradicted testimony he showed that the people in the field were requested to obtain competition wherever it was practical to do so; that if the bids were too high they were rejected; that in many cases construction work was let on the basis of competitive bidding, and that this practice was quite extensive; that the government knew whether the bids were too high because the government estimated each job, and this was done by competent estimators; that the government made plans and specifications and estimates in most cases, and that this practice continued throughout the war.

Most of the findings of fact made by The Tax Court are consistent with the foregoing (J. A. 28). Material exceptions are the following: The court found as a fact that a substantial portion of the estimated cost was reduced by the skill of Morris Ring in shopping for lower bids after the contract was awarded to him, and that he had reason to believe that he could do so. Nowhere does the court find as a fact that the government had not made a fair arm's length deal with the petitioner, nor that it was impracticable to let contracts for the erection of cantonments at the time the petitioner's contract was let on a basis which would adequately protect the government against an unfair price; nor does the court comment on the fact that the government, having the right to terminate the contract, elected to hold the petitioner to his contract, claiming the right to repudiate it later, after it had been fully performed. There is not a word of evidence in the record to show that the fair value of the services and materials, which the petitioner agreed to furnish, was less than the agreed price. The court merely assumed to determine after the event, with entire disregard to risks which were assumed, that the profits were greatly excessive. The court took the position that even though the risks were great, that since they did not materialize, no compensation ought to be paid for the assumption thereof.

21. The petitioner, while preserving its rights under the Constitution at each step of the proceedings, participated in the renegotiation, but did not agree to the amount claimed by the Government, whereupon the Secretary of War issued his unilateral determination demanding a return of $1,365,000, later reduced by The Tax Court to $1,208,965.13.

The administrative procedure was completely exhausted before a petition for review was filed in the Circuit Court. Ring Construction Corporation claimed numerous errors were committed by The Tax Court, not only in the determination of factual questions, but in matters of law. The Circuit Court held that the Renegotiation Act "places an exclusive and unreviewable jurisdiction in The Tax Court to determine the amount of excessive profits, including questions both of law and fact in such determination," and upon that basis refused to review any such issues. Petitioner argued that the Congress did not intend that the Renegotiation Act should be retrospective, as applied to the contract directly between the Government and a private contractor. Petitioner claimed before that Court that the Act was unconstitutional in its retroactive application to the petitioner's contract directly with the Government upon its construction of Lichter vs. United States, 334 U. S. 742. The Circuit Court overruled the petitioner's contention, completely ignoring the very careful language of that opinion which indicates that this court did not intend that decision to apply to a contract directly with the United States; and it said that a national crisis justifies the exception to the previously well established rule to the contrary. Petitioner urged that even if the Act might be validly applied to such a contract retroactively with respect to certain types of war supplies, an exception ought to be carried out with respect to the type of work to be done by the petitioner under its first and large contract, there being no difficulty in fairly ascertaining such costs before letting a contract in the field of erection of cantonments, apparently ignoring the language of this court when it said "The Renegotiation Act is constitutional on its face."

SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS

The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia erred:

1. In refusing to review the errors of law committed by The Tax Court in its decision.
2. In refusing and declining to take plenary jurisdiction of the proceeding herein pursuant to the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States for a full judicial review and consideration of the questions involved in the de novo proceeding before The Tax Court.
3. In holding that the rights of petitioner against the United States, arising out of a contract with it, are not protected by the Fifth Amendment.
4. In applying the Renegotiation Act to the large contract for the erection of cantonments.
5. In by-passing judicial review and/or consideration of the decision of The Tax Court of the United States on the ground that the exercise of its functions under the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States had been withheld by Section 403(e)(1) of the Act of October 28, 1942 as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943.

6. The court erred in failing to allow as part of the job cost the entire sum found by it to be due under contract to each Messrs. Floyd and Wiik, pursuant to the First Amendment of the Renegotiation Act, Sec. 403 (c) (3).

REASONS FOR GRANTING WRIT

1. The application for a writ herein presents a grave and basic constitutional question, viz.: Can Congress, by Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, make the decision of a purely executive or administrative body or board final and non-reviewable under the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States without the limitation imposed being a denial of due process of law under the Fifth and Seventh Amendments to the Constitution of the United States?

2. The questions presented in this proceeding have to do with an express denial of judicial review by an act of Congress of a claim arising under the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, viz:

(a) The taking of private property for a public use without just and/or reasonable compensation paid therefor.

(b) Limiting constitutional questions of law, arising under an act of Congress, to the determination of an administrative agency in the Executive Branch of the Government; and

(c) Withholding resort to the Courts to test the legal sufficiency of direct or indirect legislative fixing of a "fair return" for work done or services rendered under direct contracts with the Government that provide for specific amounts to be paid.

3. Section 403(e)(1) of the so-called Renegotiation Act, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, enacted February 25, 1944, provides that The Tax Court shall exercise only the powers conferred upon it as an administrative agency in the Executive Department of the Government; but with respect to a judicial review of the determination of The Tax Court of the United States, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in dismissing the petition to review The Tax Court's order (erroneously called a judgment), holds and decides in this case that such review is expressly withheld from the Courts by the language of Section 403(e)(1) of the Renegotiation Act as amended. See its similar ruling in U. S. Electrical Motors, Inc. v. Jones, 80 U. S. App. D. C. 329, 331, 153 Fed. (2d) 134. The language of Section 403(e)(1) of the Act raises a basic and serious constitutional issue of denial of due process by an express withholding of full judicial review.

4. In the light of what this Honorable Court has said in the case of Lichter vs. United States, 334 U. S. 742 (92 L. Ed. 1694), there is grave doubt of the constitutionality of Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1934; and even though the Act be "constitutional on its face"—that being the sole constitutional question presented for decision in the Lichter case, supra —the remedy provided by Section 403(e)(1) for a limited proceeding of a de novo nature (see Aircraft & D. Equipment Corporation, 331 U. S. 752) before The Tax Court does not square with the requirements of due process of law as defined in Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. vs. United States, 263 U. S. 456, (68 L. Ed. 388).

5. In the case of Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. supra, the question was whether property had been taken without due process of law as provided by Section 15(a) of the Transportation Act of February 28, 1920 (41 Stat. 456), in the absence of judicial review; and the answer to the question was that Section 15(a) of the Transportation Act—providing for the renegotiation of rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission—did not purport to make a determination of the Commission conclusive; thus it is only where an opportunity of judicial review is withheld by a legislative fixing of rates and/or a fair return for services rendered that constitutional rights are invaded. The Court said specifically on this point in the Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. case, supra, viz:

> "It is further objected that no opportunity is given under Sec. 15a for a judicial hearing as to whether the return fixed is a fair return. The steps prescribed in the act constitute a direct and indirect legislative fixing of rates. No special provision need be made in the act for the judicial consideration of its reasonableness on the issue of confiscation. Resort to the courts for such an inquiry exists under Sections 208 and 211 of the Judicial Code. It is only where such opportunity is withheld that a provision for legislative fixing of rates violates the Federal Constitution. Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon, 253 U. S. 287, 64 L. ed. 908, P. U. R. 1920E, 814, 40 Sup. Ct. Rep. 527."

However, in the case of this petitioner the order of The Tax Court was given unreviewable finality. This appears to constitute a denial of due process.

6. The provisions of Subchapter B, Sections 1141 and 1142 of the Internal Revenue Code provide for judicial review of determinations by The Tax Court; and those sections are adequate with respect to the jurisdiction conferred upon such an administrative agency as a condition precedent to judicial review, Cf. Aircraft and D. Equipment Corporation, supra; but when the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia says that,—

> "The questions raised by the petitioner, other than the constitutionality of the statute when retroactively applied, are not open to review by this court. Section 403(e) of the original Act, as amended by Section 701 of the Second Renegotiation Act (Revenue Act of 1943, Title VII), provides that upon the filing of a petition for redetermination, the Tax Court

> '. . . shall have exclusive jurisdiction, by order, to finally determine the amount, if any, of such excessive profits received or accrued by the contractor or subcontractor, and such determination shall not be reviewed or redetermined by any court or agency.'

With respect to this unequivocal language we said in U. S. Electrical Motors, Inc. v. Jones, 80 U. S. App. D. C. 329, 331, 153 F. (2d) 134, 136 (1946):

> '. . . We think . . . the statute places exclusive and unreviewable jurisdiction in the Tax Court to determine the amount of excessive profits, including questions of both law and fact in such determination, . . .'

We do not stop, therefore, to state or examine the faults found by the petitioner with the procedure and determination of the Tax Court, but pass on to its argument that the Congress did not intend the Renegotiation Act to apply retroactively and that if so applied the statute is unconstitutional."

it in effect, if not directly, finds and holds that petitioner's opportunity for a judicial review of matters decided by The Tax Court in the de novo proceeding before it is expressly withheld; and that the Courts of Appeal of the United States do not have jurisdiction to review decisions of The Tax Court in matters committed to it in the first instance by Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of Section 403 of the so-called Renegotiation Act, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943 "in the same manner and to the same extent as decisions of District Courts in civil actions tried without a jury" as expressly provided by Section 1141 of the Internal Revenue Code, as amended.

7. In the Lichter case, supra, this Honorable Court did not hold that the lack of judicial review of legislative fixing of reasonable return to persons having contracts with the Government by The Tax Court in a de novo proceeding was in accord with due process of law; nor did the Lichter case, supra present the question of the constitutionality of Section 403(e) (1) or (2) being in conflict with Sections 1141 and 1142 of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to judicial review of decisions of The Tax Court of the United States. All that was decided in the Lichter case, supra, was that the so-called Renegotiation Act was constitutional on its face; and that if it be unconstitutional because of any specific defects in its administration, an attack thereon may be presented for judicial consideration after the procedural remedies for a de novo proceeding before The Tax Court of the United States had been complied with, Cf. Aircraft and D. Equipment Corporation, supra.

8. There is grave doubt as to a de novo proceeding before The Tax Court of the United States—being the only remedy to raise a constitutional issue—being sufficient as due process of law; unless judicial consideration of a plenary character at some stage of the remedy provided be granted with respect to the exaction of so-called excessive profits. The analogy is a proceeding to assess and/or collect deficiencies in tax (see Old Colony Trust Company vs. Commissioner, 279 U. S. 716).

9. The constitutional functions of The Tax Court—to the extent that they may partake of a judicial consideration of questions submitted to it as an administrative agency in the Executive Department of the United States —demands and requires judicial review. (See Old Colony Trust Company, supra.)

10. Section 403(e)(1) or (2) of the so-called Renegotiation Act, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, purports to utilize the functions of The Tax Court as defined by the Act of its creation; and with respect to the de novo proceeding so lodged, it is not important whether such a proceeding was originally begun by an administrative or executive determination, but it is important that before the determination of The Tax Court becomes final—or more than prima facie—judicial review be not withheld (see Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. vs. United States, supra; Ohio Valley Water Co. v. Ben Avon Borough, 253 U. S. 289).

11. The de novo nature of a proceeding before The Tax Court pursuant to Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Act does not make it judicial within the meaning of the judicial articles of the Constitution. (See Muskrat vs. United States, 219 U. S. 346). It may not be gainsaid that the claim of petitioner to the profits earned under the contracts of March 26, 1942 and October 3, 1942 presents a "case" or "controversy" within the meaning of Article III of the Constitution; nor that the demand of the Secretary of War for a refund or recapture of a part of said profits be not a chose in action vested in the United States. Therefore, it is clear that by the provisions of Section 403(e)(1) or (2) the regular proceedings established by law or custom for the protection or enforcement of rights are so restricted as to amount to an express denial of judicial consideration.

12. Any Act of Congress, or a provision thereof, that expressly withholds judicial consideration—within the meaning of the judicial articles of the Constitution—of a case or controversy of the kind presented in this proceeding, is a matter of grave concern to the public; and unless the constitutional rights of petitioner herein to a full and complete judicial consideration of the adequacy of the remedy that it must pursue (in order to resist the demands made upon it) be made clear by an authoritative determination of this Honorable Court, its rights to judicial consideration under the judicial articles of the Constitution will be limited vicariously to what an inferior tribunal says they are by reference to the opinion of this Honorable Court in the case of Lichter v. United States, supra; or the constitutional functions of this Honorable Court will have been unconstitutionally withdrawn by Section 403(e)(1) or (2) and conferred exclusively upon The Tax Court of the United States. Cf. Aircraft and D. Equipment Corporation supra. The Tax Court was not restrained in its conclusions on the "constitutionality of the Renegotiation Act on its face", and it could have held the Act unconstitutional—rightly or wrongly. It did conceive the necessity of passing on the constitutionality of said Act as a segment of the matters submitted to it for an authoritative and/or conclusive determination thereof, viz.: the issue of due process of law relied upon by petitioner in the proceeding before it.

13. Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, appears to delegate to The Tax Court of the United States, as an administrative agency in the Executive Department of the Government, authority to make findings of fact on the subject of amounts paid out under contracts with the Government being reasonable; but to say that its findings of fact and/or conclusions of law are conclusive, where constitutional rights of liberty and property are involved, is to place those rights at the mercy of administrative officials and seriously to impair the security intended by the judicial safeguards of Article III of the Constitution. (See St. Joseph Stockyards Co. vs. United States, 298 U. S. 38 (80 L. Ed. 1033). In the case of Estep vs. United States, 327 U. S. 114 (90 L. Ed. 667), it is held that Congress may not constitutionally make the findings of a Selective Draft Board final and nonreviewable by the Courts. That to do so is a denial of due process of law; and in a case where judicial review is withheld the door of the Constitution is closed to a person whose liberty is at stake or whose property has been confiscated.

14. The record herein discloses that at every stage of the administrative remedy imposed by the so-called Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended from time to time, petitioner has protested the denial of due process of law made evident by Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of said Act. Therefore, in the light of what was said by this Honorable Court in the case of Aircraft and D. Equipment Corporation, supra, petitioner has reserved its right to make application for full judicial consideration of its claim to the protection of due process of law under the judicial articles of the Constitution of the United States.

15. The case of Brinkerhoff-Faris Trust & Savings Company vs. Hill, 281 U. S. 673 (74 L. Ed. 1107) illustrates quite clearly that a legislative and/or judicial withholding of "judicial review" of matters underlying a "case or controversy" within the meaning of Article III of the Constitution of the United States is a denial of due process of law; and it would appear that a legislative attempt to withhold judicial consideration of matters underlying a case or controversy within the meaning of Article III of the Constitution of the United States could not be more clearly demonstrated than is proposed by the language of Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Act of April 28, 1942, as amended. Therefore, there is no effect to be attributed to the decision of The Tax Court of the United States entered April 6, 1948; but unless the conflict that is apparent between decisions of this Honorable Court and the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia herein—with respect to the meaning of the term "judicial review and/or consideration"—be reconciled by an authoritative decision of this Court herein, a grave injustice will be done to petitioner and the judicial articles of the Constitution will be by-passed by Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943.

16. There are inescapable questions of law, arising out of the facts that ought to have been decided in petitioner's favor by The Tax Court, and should have been considered by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, on the errors assigned in the petition for review. Such questions have to do with the allowance of amounts due Messrs. Floyd and Wiik as proper expenses incurred and inescapable as to payment by petitioner, viz: (a) The evidence is undisputed and the Court found that neither Floyd nor Wiik have any family relationship whatsoever to any of the stockholders, officers or directors of the Ring Construction Corporation; that neither of them were ever stockholders of the corporation; that their contracts were usual in the trade and were of the type that they had for a substantial length of time before the Camp McCoy work was undertaken; that their fixed compensation was very low, and that in some years they earned much less than their time was worth; (b) on the basis of these undisputed facts, it is our position that the Court was required to allow in full the amounts of their contract claims as "job cost"; (c) the First Amendment to the Renegotiation Act, Section 403(c)(3), made effective as of the date of the original act provides: "In determining the excessiveness of profits * * * the secretary shall recognize the properly applicable exclusions and deductions of the character which the contractor, or subcontractor, is allowed under Chapter 1 and Chapter 2 E of the Internal Revenue Code."; (d) the rules of The Tax Court with respect to such matters are fully discussed in Mertens' Law of Federal Income Taxation (1942 ed.), Vol. 4, page 396, in which we find the statement at pages 401-402:

> "If the contingent compensation is paid pursuant to a free and arm's length bargain between employer and the individual, particularly where made before the services are rendered, and the terms are not influenced by any consideration on part of the employer other than that of securing on fair and advantageous terms the services of the individual, the payment will be deductible as salary or compensation even though in the actual working out of the contract the amount received by the employee is greater than the amount which would ordinarily be paid."

17. The decision of The Tax Court denied petitioner an allowance of proper cost and expense incurred in the performance of the contracts in question by reducing very materially the allowance which was required as a matter of law to have been made by reason of the services of Messrs. Floyd and Wiik. This reduced the "job cost" of the contracts with the Government, and therefore reduced the profits that petitioner may enjoy pursuant to the decision of The Tax Court, making them considerably less than is reasonable and/or adequate from the standpoint of due process of law as guaranteed by the Fifth Amendment, and as required to be allowed by the Renegotiation Act. The question of whether the decision of The Tax Court herein squares with the principle of due process of law is inescapably a "judicial issue" within the meaning of the judicial Articles of the Constitution; but it is evident by judgment of the appellate court herein that full judicial review of petitioner's right to "judicial consideration" of vital questions of law is expressly withheld by Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943. Even though petitioner be cast on the legal questions involved herein, on a full judicial review of its constitutional rights, the basic issue is that judicial consideration thereof may not be denied in limine nor may it be withheld, as proposed.

PRAYER FOR WRIT

WHEREFORE petitioner respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari be issued out of and under the seal of this Honorable Court directed to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia commanding that Court to certify and send to this Court for its review and determination on a day certain to be therein named, a transcript of the record and proceedings herein. Your petitioner further prays that the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia be reversed by this Honorable Court, and that petitioner have such other and further relief in the premises as to this Honorable Court may seem meet and just.

Dated this the 10th day of March, 1950.

MEMORANDUM
BRIEF IN SUPPORT OF PETITION FOR WRIT

The pertinent questions and basic issues presented are,—

1. Was the Court in error in refusing to review the errors of law claimed to have been committed by The Tax Court?

2. Did the Circuit Court err in sustaining the constitutionality of the Renegotiation Act in the light of the Fifth Amendment as to this contract between the petitioner and the United States Government, it not being a mere sub-contract?

3. Was the Circuit Court in error in refusing to make an exception to the Act based upon the character of the services and material to be furnished under the contract, the same not being new in the market, and the cost and value thereof being readily determinable, and having been in fact determined by the Government before the contract was let?

In the event Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, be invalid only with respect to its provisions which withhold judicial review, then the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia is erroneous for the reason that it should have taken full jurisdiction of the petition for review to resolve the judicial questions presented, viz:

1. If The Tax Court may, in violation of well established rules of law, make a finding of fact which is not subject to review, then many previous decisions of this Court are set at naught. The right of judicial review by due process of law will have been negated. The contract with the United States Government is a property right, and the same may not be impaired without just compensation, nor does war suspend the Fifth Amendment with respect to property taken for public use. Rights such as these may not be placed at the mercy of administrative officials or tribunals without the right to judicial review.

Yakus v. United States. Rottenberg et al v. Same, 321 U. S. 414, 64 S. Ct. 660

2. Among the errors of law claimed to have been committed by The Tax Court, and which the Circuit Court refused to review but held to be final and conclusive are the following:

A. The Tax Court held that the burden of proof is on the petitioner to show that it had not received excessive profits.

B. The Court failed to give proper weight to the element of risk involved in the principal contract, and ignored the absence of proof by the Government that the contract price was unfair.

C. The Court refused to give credit as part of the job cost for the sum of over $110,000 paid to one Floyd, and over $102,000 paid to one Wiik, in violation of Chapter 1 and Chapter 2 E, of the Internal Revenue Code, as required by the first amendment of the Renegotiation Act, Section 403 (c) (3).

D. The Court's ruling that the petitioner's profits were excessive was erroneous as a matter of law.

3. The Court erred in applying the Renegotiation Act to this large contract for the erection of cantonments. The evidence in the case conclusively shows that there is nothing novel about the erection of cantonments consisting of frame buildings, many of typical design duplicated over a large area; and further shows that the Government had skilled men well qualified to prepare plans and specifications and estimate the cost of such work before letting a contract, and that it did so in this case; the record further shows that almost identical work of identical units was let to other contractors at the same time at higher prices, and that after the contract was let the Government offered petitioner additional units at higher unit prices, which it refused to take. There was no reason why the Government could not, and as a matter of fact it did deal entirely at arm's length with the petitioner, being at least equal in bargaining strength. If, arguendo, the Act was generally constitutional as to certain types of hazardous and novel procurement, then the Court should have said that even if the statute is valid for one set of circumstances it could not be applied to the circumstances here under consideration, because under such circumstances it was wholly unreasonable. Nebbia v. People of the State of New York, 291 U. S. 502, 54 S. Ct. 505.

4. The Circuit Court erred in holding that the rights of petitioner against the United States, arising out of a contract with it, are not protected by the Fifth Amendment.

Choate v. Trapp, 224 U. S. 665, 32 S. Ct. 565

Perry v. United States 294 U. S. 330.

5. The Court's decision was based upon Lichter v. United States, 334 U. S. 742. This was erroneous. The language of the Court in the Lichter case clearly indicates that the decision was made only as to existing contracts between private parties, and did not involve a case between a private party and the United States. The instant case is the only reported case involving a contract directly with the Government, and in which the petitioner has exhausted its administrative remedy; cases involving a failure to exhaust the administrative remedy are not applicable here.

SUMMARY

This petition raises a question involving the application of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States not previously passed upon by this Court; the decision of the Circuit Court is in clear violation of the previous decisions of this Court hereinbefore listed; the issues involved are of the utmost public importance and may be said to involve the very integrity of the Government of the United States.

This Court, in the case of Estep vs. United States, 327 U. S. 114, said:

> Thus we start with a statute which makes no provision for judicial review of the actions of the local boards or the appeal agencies. That alone, of course, is not decisive. For the silence of Congress as to judicial review is not necessarily to be construed as a denial of the power of the federal courts to grant relief in the exercise of the general jurisdiction which Congress has conferred upon them. American School v. McAnnulty, 187 U. S. 94, 47 L. ed. 90, 23 S. Ct. 33; Gegiow v. Uhl, 239 U. S. 3, 60 L. ed. 114, 36 S. Ct. 2; Stork v. Wickard, 321 U. S. 288, 88 L. ed. 733, 64 S. Ct. 559. Judicial review may indeed be required by the Constitution, Ng Fung Ho v. White, 259 U. S. 276, 66 L. ed. 938, 42 S. Ct. 492.

At p. 122 of the opinion in the Estep case the Court continued to discuss the judicial reviewability of such "final" actions of the local draft boards as administrative agencies in the following language:

> * * * We cannot readily infer that Congress departed so far from the traditional concepts of a fair trial when it made the actions of the local boards "final" as to provide that a citizen of this country should go to jail for not obeying an unlawful order of an administrative agency. We are loathe to believe that Congress reduced criminal trials under the Act to proceedings so barren of the customary safeguards which the law has designed for the protection of the accused. The provision making the decisions of the local boards "final" means to us that Congress chose not to give administrative action under this Act the customary scope of judicial review which obtains under other statutes. It means the courts are not to weigh the evidence to determine whether the classification made by the local boards was justified. The decisions of the local boards made in conformity with the regulations are final even though they may be erroneous. The question of jurisdiction of the > local board is reached only if there is no basis in fact for the classification which it gave the registrant. See Goff v. United States (CCA 4th) 135 F. 2d 610, 612.

> Falbo v. United States, 320 U. S. 549, 88 L. ed. 305, 64 S. Ct. 346, supra, does not preclude such a defense in the present cases. In the Falbo case the defendant challenged the order of his local board before he had exhausted his administrative remedies. Here these registrants had pursued their administrative remedies to the end. All had been done which could be done. Submission to induction would be satisfaction of the orders of the local boards, not a further step to obtain relief from them. (Emphasis supplied)

Consequently, a judgment of the Third Circuit affirming a conviction of the registrant in the District Court for the Western District of Pennsylvania was reversed on the ground that the finality conferred by the Act to the decisions of the local boards did not foreclose judicial determination of the question whether in classifying the registrant a board acted within its jurisdiction.

Unlike the Estep case, Congress was not silent in Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act of 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, as to the judicial reviewability of the final "determination" of a purely administrative agency, The Tax Court. Such review is expressly forbidden by the language of Section 403(e)(1) of the Act. This was a dual command both to potential litigants and the courts, including this court. This amounted to a legislative injunction against the exercise by our Federal Courts, constitutionally created, of their historic duty of judging the validity of a "final" administratve order or decision. This command by Congress seems to constitute a bold and declared intention to deprive a litigant of due process of law under the Fifth Amendment. Such denial of due process of law amounts to confiscation. (See Dayton-Goose Creek Ry. Co. vs. United States, 263 U. S. 456.)

Confiscation of property is not tolerated to any greater degree than is a denial of liberty.

The opinion and judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in this proceeding appears to be in conflict with the opinion of the Court in the case of Knowles vs. Hirsch, 65 Fed. Supp. 690. The Knowles case was before a statutory 3-Judge Court sitting for the District of Columbia. In that case the Court speaks of the constitutionality of appropriate appellate court action to review a determination by The Tax Court within the meaning of Section 403(e)(1) and (2) of the Renegotiation Act of April 28, 1942, as amended by Section 701(b) of the Revenue Act of 1943, viz:

> "The plaintiff's plea of the statute's unconstitutionality is prematurely presented here, as it should be urged first in the Tax Court. That court, in tax cases, has passed upon constitutional questions heretofore, and its decisions concerning them have been appealed and the appeals so taken have been considered by the courts. While the Renegotiation Act provides that when the Tax Court has redetermined the amount of excessive profits there shall be no judicial review of its determination, it does not follow that a Tax Court decision concerning the constitutionality of the Act may not be reviewed by the courts. Since the Tax Court is an agency in the executive branch of the government, it does not have, and could not be given, final or exclusive jurisdiction to determine constitutional questions. The power to pass on the constitutionality of an act of the Congress is a prerogative of the judicial branch of the government. Constitutional questions under the Renegotiation Act are, in the first instance, part of the case before the Tax Court, but, as with questions of jurisdiction, the decisions of that court concerning them are appealable. Consequently, the plaintiff in the case at bar must first present his constitutional question to the Tax Court if he desires to obtain an adjudication concerning it."

We submit that the constitutionality of Section 403(c) (1) and (2) of the Act is a question which this Court should decide authoritatively.
